Having to deal with an unclean house in times like this can be a real headache. But there's no need to worry much as Shark navigator lift away vacuums are here to get the job done for you. They are one of the best vacuums available in the market right now. But yes, to keep its performance on and going we need to clean its components properly. In this article, I'm going to talk about how to take apart a shark navigator lift away so you won't feel any kind of trouble regarding this matter whatsoever. Read More: Shark Steam Mop Not Steaming There are multiple steps you need to follow to open and clean up your shark vacuum properly. Those steps are as follows Step 1: Taking out the base plate If you want to reach the brush bar and brush motor you have to take out the base plate first. Otherwise, you won't be able to reach there. Start the process by removing the screws. There are a total of eight screws. One thing should be noted that two of these screws are located below the small front wheel and another two in between the big wheels. A special star-shaped security bit is required for the job. And once you remove all the screws successfully you'll have easy access to the components inside. Step 2: Taking out the brush motor Usually, the newer models have two additional screws on the side of the motor for safety. So first you need to take them out. But the older models don't have this and you can easily live it out. After that is done you'll then need to remove the circuit board leads which are connected with motor contacts. Use needle-nose pliers to get this job done. Step 3: Taking out the circuit board Removing the circuit board is always a good idea if you are removing your brush motor anyway. Because sometimes, the circuit board can also be the reason behind your vacuum cleaner not functioning properly. There's also a handle engagement switch located on the side of the circuit board. This only activates the brushbar if the handle is in the right position. Step 4: Taking apart the motor housing unit A very easy and fast way to remove the pipe which kind of looks like an elbow is pulling it in your direction. Don't be too harsh on it. Just pull it out gently and it'll come out very easily. Step 5: Taking out the latches on the side If you reached this far without facing any great trouble. The next step of this process is to move the latches from the sides. This process is also not that hard to complete and you can do it very easily. But before that first, you need to get rid of the HEPA filter and the cover in front. After that, you need to lay down your motor housing and push the dowel pins. These pins hold the latches in their place. To get rid of these pins you need to apply a specific amount of pressure alongside a center hole punch. But this pressure is not so much that you need to use a hammer to get the job done. Step 6: Take out all the screws from the motor housing Remove all the screws which can be found in the front plate. A very good point to be noted here is that a screw stays hidden behind the sticker which contains the words "loss of suction". So you need to take that out too. So all in all there should be six screws that you need to take out. Also, some screws can be found on the back of the handle holder, remove them too. To remove the motor from the housing you need to remove all the screws from the base. If all the screws are in their place you should find 10 screws in total. Don't be impatient. Slowly remove all the screws one by one and your motor should come out just fine without facing any sort of trouble. Top tips before you start the process If you are taking apart your Shark navigator lift away for the first time then it might look like an enormous task for you multiple things needed to be kept in mind. So, videotaping yourself is always a good idea while you are completing the process. If you forget any step you can always look back to the tape and figure out how you did it the first time around. Also, follow the instructions given in this article properly and you shouldn't face much trouble. Emptying the dust cup after cleaning and disassembling the brush motor and HEPA filters after every month or two is also advised. Cleaning the HEPA filter is a really easy process. Just pull it out slowly towards you and it'll come out. Keep the dirty side on the bottom and clean away all the dust with a brush. Yes, it is recommended to clean the filters every month. The more you keep your machine clean the more it'll run smoothly. Conclusion All of us want to have a neat and clean house. People tell you there is no going back once you have used one and with two kids and two dogs who love to make a mess I can wholeheartedly agree with that. The model that I have is the Shark DuoClean Lift-Away and it is fantastic. One of the things Shark is known for is that they say their vacuums never lose suction. This is true, but only if you show them a little TLC. If you clean your shark vacuum then it can give you a lifetime of use. I like to give mine a clean once a month, but some might say that is a little excessive and every couple of months would be fine. Anyway, keep on reading and I will share with you how to clean a Shark vacuum. How To Know When Your Shark Vacuum Needs Cleaning A Shark vacuum like most others has some telltale signs for when things are getting a little clogged up. The most common way to know is if the suction is not right and it is leaving dirt behind on the floor. Also if it is making odd sounds that it did not make before and if the air it is pumping out smells weird. If yours is doing any of these things it is time to give it a clean! How To Clean A Shark Vacuum I think it is best to clean it in three stages, the rotating brush, the canister, and the filters. I would say that these cleaning methods will work for all Shark vacuums. Cleaning The Rotating Brush It is crazy the things that can get stuck in here. If you have pets then more than likely it will be pet hair. Step 1: Make sure your vacuum is off (look I know it is common sense, but I have to say it) and turn it over. You may want to put it on a garbage bag or do it outside if you are worried about the mess.Step 2: Look for anything that is stuck in the rotating brush. Old bits of food, Lego, pet hair and other such things. Sometimes it is easier to get a pair of scissors and cut out the pet hair than untangle it.Step 3: Once I have removed all the debris that I can see I like to use a small brush and give the rotating brush a gentle scrub to remove the last little bits of debris that I may have missed. The Shark Duoclean range, including the Powered Lift-Away, Rocket Ultra-Light, IONFlex Cordless, Apex, and the Lift-Away Speed, all feature an easy-to-clean brush roll system. This involves removing the top panel, or 'garage', which is located on the vacuum head. Once the panel is removed, the DuoClean brush roll can be removed. Any hair or dirt can be removed, and there is even a hair removal tool that is included and is found under the panel. The soft roller brush can also be ejected and cleaned. The short instructional video above from Shark will show you how to take the bottom off a Shark vacuum and guide you through the process. Cleaning The Canister Cleaning the canister is not the grossest part of this job like you may think it is! This is actually very easy to do. Step 1: Remove the canister from your Shark vacuum and empty all of the garbage. Some people do this and leave it at that and never have an issue.Step 2: I am a bit excessive so I like to get a baby wipe and clean as much of the inside of the canister as I can. It takes a couple of minutes if that and then you just need to leave it to fully dry. Cleaning The Filters When it comes to filters the main ones that make a Shark vacuum cleaner so good are the HEPA filters. These are what keep all the nasty dust and allergens inside the vacuum. If your vacuum smells a bit funky, the filters need cleaning. These instructions will work for HEPA filters and also the regular standard kind. One extra thing I want to say is that when it comes to the regular filters (not the HEPA ones) some Shark vacuum models have felt and others use rubber filters. Felt filters are much more delicate and Shark does not actually recommend that you wash them so do so at your own risk. If you do, make sure you are very gentle. Step 1: Remove all of the filters. Now, this is nice and easy to do, but make sure you make a mental note of where each one goes this makes putting them back much easier. What I did when I first got the vacuum I have now is take a picture on my phone.Step 2: I am not going to lie, these things are gross! Before you start the cleaning process. Give them a little tap over the garbage can to shake off as much dust as you can. This will make your cleaning much easier and less disgusting.Step 3: Using mildly warm water give the filters a rinse. The HEPA filters and the other filters of the vacuum should be cleaned the same way. Be gentle and just give them a little squeeze or rub to get all the dust out. You can use some mild washing detergent if you want, but I would advise using a tiny amount. Keep rinsing until the water coming out of them is clear.Step 4: Now this is very, very important. Leave all of your filters out to dry. You will find that the plastic based one dry very quickly, but the others can take a very long time, especially the HEPA filters. Even if they are just a little bit damp, do not put them back in the vacuum cleaner.Step 5: Once they are fully dried you can put them back in the vacuum cleaner and you are ready to go! The HEPA filters can wear out over time (a very long time) so make sure you get replacement ones if the vacuum still smells odd even after a good cleaning. Your Shark vacuum gives you so much and it asks for so little in return. People make the mistake of thinking that just because Shark says their vacuums never lose suction that they do not have to do anything to make that so. Cleaning a vacuum is not a pleasant experience, but it is not hard at all. In all honesty, I would say the whole drying of the filters takes longer than the actual cleaning process. If your Shark has not been performing the way it usually does, giving it a good clean will really bring it back to life. Now that you know how to clean a Shark vacuum there is no excuse for you not to give it a good clean every once and a while. link to Water Coming Back Up Through Kitchen Sink? 4 Causes link to Roomba Troubleshooting Guide - Most Common Issues [Solved]
